Trump tweets

During the 2016 US presidential election, then-candidate Donald J. Trump used his Twitter account as a way to communicate with potential voters. On August 6, 2016 Todd Vaziri tweeted (https://twitter.com/tvaziri/status/762005541388378112) about Trump that "Every non-hyperbolic tweet is from iPhone (his staff). Every hyperbolic tweet is from Android (from him)." Data scientist David Robinson conducted an analysis (http://varianceexplained.org/r/trump-tweets/) to determine if data supported this assertion. Here we go through David's analysis to learn some of the basics of text mining. To learn more about text mining in R we recommend this book: https://www.tidytextmining.com.

We will use the following libraries:

```r if(!require(tidyverse)) install.packages("tidyverse")

In general, we can extract data directly from Twitter using the rtweet package. However, in this case, a group has already compiled data for us and made it available at http://www.trumptwitterarchive.com.

url <- 'http://www.trumptwitterarchive.com/data/realdonaldtrump/%s.json' trump_tweets <- map(2009:2017, ~sprintf(url, .x)) %>% map_df(jsonlite::fromJSON, simplifyDataFrame = TRUE) %>% filter(!is_retweet & !str_detect(text, '^"')) %>% mutate(created_at = parse_date_time(created_at, orders = "a b! d! H!:M!:S! z!* Y!", tz="EST"))
```

Warning: Problem with `mutate()` input `created_at`.
x All formats failed to parse. No formats found.
i Input `created_at` is `parse_date_time(...)`.

Warning: All formats failed to parse. No formats found.

For convenience we include the result of the code above in the dslabs package.

```r if(!require(dslabs)) install.packages("dslabs")
```

```
Loading required package: dslabs

##
Attaching package: 'dslabs'

The following object is masked _by_ '.GlobalEnv':
##
trump_tweets
```

```r library(dslabs)
data("trump_tweets")
```

This is the data frame with information about the tweet.

head(trump_tweets)
```

We can use extract to remove the Twitter for part of the source and filter out retweets.

trump_tweets %>%
  extract(source, "source", "Twitter for (.*)") %>% count(source)
```

source     n
1     Android  4652
2   BlackBerry    78
3         iPad    39
4       iPhone  3962
5     Websites     1
6         <NA> 12029
```

We are interested in what happened during the campaign, so for the analysis here we will focus on what was tweeted between the day Trump announced his campaign and election day. So we define the following table.

campaign_tweets <- trump_tweets %>%
  extract(source, "source", "Twitter for (.*)") %>% filter(source %in% c("Android", "iPhone") & created_at >= ymd("2015-06-17") &
           created_at < ymd("2016-11-08")) %>% filter(!is_retweet) %>% arrange(created_at)

We can now use data visualization to explore the possibility that two different groups were tweeting from these devices. For each tweet, we will extract the hour, in the east coast (EST), it was tweeted then compute the proportion of tweets tweeted at each hour for each device.

ds_theme_set() campaign_tweets %>% mutate(hour = hour(with_tz(created_at, "EST"))) %>% count(source, hour) %>% group_by(source) %>% mutate(percent = n / sum(n)) %>% ungroup %>% ggplot(aes(hour, percent, color = source)) + geom_line() + geom_point() + scale_y_continuous(labels = percent_format()) + labs(x = "Hour of day (EST)", y = "% of tweets", color = "")

We notice a big peak for the Android in early hours of the morning, between 6 and 8 AM. There seems to be a clear different in these patterns. We will therefore assume that two different entities are using these two devices. Now we will study how their tweets differ. To do this we introduce the tidytext package.

The tidytext package helps us convert free from text into a tidy table. Having the data in this format greatly facilitates data visualization and applying statistical techniques.

if(!require(tidytext)) install.packages("tidytext")
```

```
Loading required package: tidytext

```r library(tidytext)
```

Now let's look at a quick example with a tweet number 3008.

i <- 3008 campaign_tweets$text[i]

[1] "Great to be back in Iowa! #TBT with @JerryJrFalwell joining me in Davenport- this past winter.

```r campaign_tweets[i,] %>% unnest_tokens(word, text) %>% select(word)
```

word
3008              great ## 3008.1               to ## 3008.2               be
3008.3             back
3008.4               in ## 3008.5             iowa
3008.6              tbt
3008.7             with ## 3008.8   jerryjrfalwell
3008.9           joining

Note that the function tries to convert tokens into words and strips characters important to twitter such as # and @. A token in twitter is not the same as in regular English. For this reason, instead of using the default token, words, we define a regex that captures twitter character. The pattern appears complex but all we are defining is a patter that starts with @, # or neither and is followed by any combination of letters or digits.

pattern <- "([^A-Za-z\\d#@']|'(?![A-Za-z\\d#@]))"
```

We can now use the unnest_tokens() function with the regex option and appropriately extract the hashtags and mentions.

campaign_tweets[i,] %>%
  mutate(text = str_replace_all(text, "https://t.co/[A-Za-z\\d]+|&amp;", "")) %>%
  unnest_tokens(word, text, token = "regex", pattern = pattern) %>%
  select(word)

6

word
1               great
2                  to
3                  be
4                back
5                  in
6                iowa
7                #tbt
8                with
9    @jerryjrfalwell
10            joining
11                 me
12                 in ## 13          davenport
14               this ## 15               past
16             winter
17              #maga

Now we are ready to extract the words for all our tweets.

tweet_words <- campaign_tweets %>%
  mutate(text = str_replace_all(text, "https://t.co/[A-Za-z\\d]+|&amp;", ""))  %>%
  unnest_tokens(word, text, token = "regex", pattern = pattern)

And we can now answer questions such as "what are the most commonly used words?"

tweet_words %>% count(word) %>%
  arrange(desc(n))

word     n
1                  the  2335
2                   to  1413

It is not surprising that these are the top words. The top words are not informative. The tidytext package has database of these commonly used words, referred to as stop words, in text mining.

`stop_words`

# A tibble: 1,149 x 2

If we filter out rows representing stop words with filter(!word %in% stop_words$word).

tweet_words <- campaign_tweets %>%
  mutate(text = str_replace_all(text, "https://t.co/[A-Za-z\\d]+|&amp;", ""))  %>%
  unnest_tokens(word, text, token = "regex", pattern = pattern) %>%
  filter(!word %in% stop_words$word )

We end up with a much more informative set of top 10 tweeted words.

tweet_words %>% count(word) %>%
  top_n(10, n) %>%
  mutate(word = reorder(word, n)) %>%
  arrange(desc(n))

Some exploration of the resulting words (not show here) reveals a couple of unwanted characteristics in our tokens. * First, some of our tokens are just numbers (years for example). We want to remove these and we can find them using the regex ^+$. * Second, some of our tokens come from a quote and they start with '. We want to remove the' when it's at the start of a word, so we will use str_replace(). * We add these two lines to the code above to generate our final table.

tweet_words <- campaign_tweets %>%
  mutate(text = str_replace_all(text, "https://t.co/[A-Za-z\\d]+|&amp;", ""))  %>%
  unnest_tokens(word, text, token = "regex", pattern = pattern) %>%
  filter(!word %in% stop_words$word &
           !str_detect(word, "^\\d+$")) %>% mutate(word = str_replace(word, "^'", ""))

Now that we have all our words in a table, along with information about what device was used to compose the tweet they came from, we can start exploring which words are more common when comparing Android to iPhone.

For each word we want to know if it is more likely to come from an Android tweet or an iPhone tweet. We previously introduced the odds ratio, a summary statistic useful for quantifying these differences. For each device and a given word, let's call it y, we compute the odds or the ratio between the proportion of words that are y and not y and compute the ratio of those odds. Here we will have many proportions that are 0 so we use the 0.5 correction.

android_iphone_or <- tweet_words %>% count(word, source) %>%

  spread(source, n, fill = 0) %>% mutate(or = (Android + 0.5) / (sum(Android) - Android + 0.5) / ( (iPhone + 0.5) / (sum(iPhone) - iPhone + 0.5))) android_iphone_or %>% arrange(desc(or))

Given that several of these words are overall low frequency words we can impose a filter based on the total frequency like this.

android_iphone_or %>% filter(Android+iPhone > 100) %>%

We already see somewhat of a pattern in the types of words that are being tweeted more in one device versus the other. However, we are not interested in specific words but rather in the tone. Vaziri's assertion is that the Android tweets are more hyperbolic. So how can we check this with data? Hyperbolic is a hard sentiment to extract from words as it relies on interpreting phrases.

However, words can be associated to more basic sentiment such as as anger, fear, joy and surprise. In the next section we demonstrate basic sentiment analysis. In sentiment analysis we assign a word to one or more "sentiment". Although this approach will miss context dependent sentiments, such as sarcasm, when performed on large numbers of words, summaries can provide insights. The first step in sentiment analysis is to assign a sentiment to each word. The tidytext package includes several maps or lexicons in the object sentiments.

sentiments
```

# A tibble: 6,786 x 2
word      sentiment
<chr>     <chr>
1 2-faces   negative

2 abnormal    negative
3 abolish     negative
4 abominable  negative
5 abominably  negative
6 abominate   negative
7 abomination negative
8 abort       negative
9 aborted     negative
10 aborts      negative
# ... with 6,776 more rows

There are several lexicons in the tidytext package that give different sentiments. For example, the bing lexicon divides words into positive and negative. We can see this using the tidytext function get_sentiments().

```r get_sentiments("bing")

The AFINN lexicon assigns a score between -5 and 5, with -5 the most negative and 5 the most positive.

```r get_sentiments("afinn")

The loughran and nrc lexicons provide several different sentiments.

```r get_sentiments("loughran") %>% count(sentiment)

For the analysis here we are interested in exploring the different sentiments of each tweet, so we will use the nrc lexicon.

get_sentiments("nrc") %>% count(sentiment)
```

# A tibble: 10 x 2
sentiment        n
<chr>        <int>
1 anger         1247
2 anticipation   839
3 disgust       1058
4 fear          1476
5 joy            689
6 negative      3324
7 positive      2312
8 sadness       1191
9 surprise       534
10 trust         1231

```r nrc <- get_sentiments("nrc") %>% select(word, sentiment)
```

We can combine the words and sentiments using inner_join(), which will only keep words associated with a sentiment. Here are 10 random words extracted from the tweets.

tweet_words %>% inner_join(nrc, by = "word") %>% select(source, word, sentiment) %>% sample_n(10)
```

source        word sentiment
1   Android  compliment  positive
2    iPhone        join  positive
3    iPhone      manage     trust
4   Android       worse  negative
5   Android       level     trust
6    iPhone        vote  positive
7    iPhone       watch      fear
8    iPhone  university  positive
9    iPhone coincidence  surprise
10   iPhone magnificent       joy

Now we are ready to perform a quantitative analysis comparing Android and iPhone by comparing the sentiments of the tweets posted from each device. Here we could perform a tweet by tweet analysis, assigning a sentiment to each tweet. However, this somewhat complex since each tweet will have several sentiments attached to it, one for each word appearing in the lexicon. For illustrative purposes, we will perform a much simpler analysis: we will count and compare the frequencies of each sentiment appears for each device.

sentiment_counts <- tweet_words %>% left_join(nrc, by = "word") %>% count(source, sentiment) %>% spread(source, n) %>% mutate(sentiment = replace_na(sentiment, replace = "none")) sentiment_counts

Because more words were used on the Android than on the phone.

tweet_words %>% group_by(source) %>% summarize(n = n())

For each sentiment we can compute the odds of being in the device: proportion of words with sentiment versus proportion of words without and then compute the odds ratio comparing the two device.

sentiment_counts %>%

         iPhone = iPhone / (sum(iPhone) - iPhone), or = Android/iPhone) %>% arrange(desc(or))

So we do see some difference and the order is interesting: the largest three sentiments are disgust, anger, and negative! But are they statistically significant? How does this compare if we are just assigning sentiments at random?

To answer that question we can compute, for each sentiment, an odds ratio and confidence interval. We will add the two values we need to form a two-by-two table and the odds ratio.

library(broom) log_or <- sentiment_counts %>% mutate( log_or = log( (Android / (sum(Android) - Android)) / (iPhone / (sum(iPhone) - iPhone))), se = sqrt( 1/Android + 1/(sum(Android) - Android) + 1/iPhone + 1/(sum(iPhone) - iPhone)), conf.low = log_or - qnorm(0.975)*se, conf.high = log_or + qnorm(0.975)*se) %>% arrange(desc(log_or))

A graphical visualization shows some sentiments that are clearly overrepresented.

log_or %>% mutate(sentiment = reorder(sentiment, log_or),) %>% ggplot(aes(x = sentiment, ymin = conf.low, ymax = conf.high)) + geom_errorbar() + geom_point(aes(sentiment, log_or)) + ylab("Log odds ratio for association between Android and sentiment") + coord_flip()

We see that the disgust, anger, negative sadness and fear sentiments are associated with the Android in a way that is hard to explain by chance alone. Words not associated to a sentiment were strongly associated with the iPhone source, which is in agreement with the original claim about hyperbolic tweets.

If we are interested in exploring which specific words are driving these differences, we can go back to our android_iphone_or object.

android_iphone_or %>% inner_join(nrc) %>% filter(sentiment == "disgust" & Android + iPhone > 10) %>% arrange(desc(or))
